ITALIANS LAUNCH NEW DRIVE ALONG ETHIOPIAN FRONT

Report Today As Occupying the Village of Callaso

AIM FOR RIVER AREA

Many Heads of Tribes Present Themselves and Hand Over Arms

ROME, Italy, Oct. 25—The Italian army on the southern Ethiopian front launched a new drive today occupying the village of Callaso, current objective is the Chebili River area and also the important town of Galedi on the river 100 miles into Ethiopia.

The drive was disclosed in official military communique No. 28. "Many heads of tribes have presented themselves at Callaso for submission and to hand over their arms. 500 rifles already have been given up," the communique said.

The military activities thus revealed, the first in several days on either front, disclosed the Italians were pushing steadily northward despite heavy rain throughout the Province of Ogaden.

PORT SAID, Egypt, Oct. 25—Port Said, headquarters for the western desert and located at the northern entrance to the Suez Canal is being actively fortified to a degree of high efficiency, a survey revealed today. Two battalions of the Essex Regiment and two battalions of the Royal Sussex regiment arrived at Suez on the steamers Ellora and Nevada from India. These British troops will be stationed at Sidi Bishi, situated between Alexandria and Ahukei. Tension over the Anglo-Italian-Ethiopian crisis still ran high and authorities saw fit to cancel a football match between Egypt and Italy at Port Said, to avoid any undue friction.

LONDON, England, Oct. 25—The British Battleship "Resolution" will leave Alexandria, Egypt, for England the Admiralty officially announced today, but will be replaced within a few days by the sister ship of the same tonnage, the battleship Romilligs. The shift thus actually will not reduce one bit the great British naval strength massed in the eastern Mediterranean, during the current African crisis. If Britain is to make any noncommittal replies to Italy's withdrawal of 15,000 troops from the Egyptian-Libyan border, the move is yet to come. The announcement was not accompanied by any explanation, but there was an immediate tendency in London to connect the Resolution's withdrawal with the Italian decision to shift troops at Libya.

The Truth About Our County Institutions

In the interest of truth, and of square-dealing with the citizenship, we present here verbatim copies and extracts of official reports made by Grand Juries, and by the Board of Visitors to the County Home, in fulfillment of their respective duties of inspecting and reporting upon the management, upkeep, condition, etc., of the Court House and the County Offices therein, the County Jail, and the County Home.

Four times a year the County buildings are inspected by the Grand Jury—an impartial and non-political body of men and women responsible to the Court. And four times a year the County Home is inspected and officially reported upon by the Board of Visitors, also an impartial and non-political body and likewise responsible to the Court.

The reports that are reproduced here were not especially picked for the purpose, but were chosen at random from the records covering more than two years. They are typical of the findings of other Grand Juries and Boards of Visitors, and the complete record of all such reports by men and women concerned only with putting the truth before the Court ,is indisputable proof not only of the honest, efficient and economical management of these offices and institutions, but of the politically partisan and intentionally untruthful character of trumped-up stories to the contrary.

In addition to the reports by Grand Juries and Boards of Visitors to the County Home, we submit to the electorate of Bucks County a letter of unstinted praise of the administration of these properties, and the care of inmates, by the then Secretary of Welfare, Mrs. I. Albert Liveright.

Republican Candidate
For
BRISTOL SCHOOL BOARD

Seeking public office for the first time during his 28 years as a resident of Bristol, Arthur P. Brady, is a candidate for school director and asks the votes of the people at the general election to be held November 5th.

Mr. Brady is a native of Newcastle, England, the son of the late Bernard and Mary Brady. He came to the United States, alone, when but 17 years of age, and took up his residence in Bristol.

Although nothing but a lad, Mr. Brady had learned tile-making in England, but when he reached Bristol he sought employment in the local industries. He later embarked in the grocery business, which he continued for 28 years, retiring about a year ago.

Mr. Brady married Catherine Dugan in St. Mark's Church, Bristol, in 1907, and he and Mrs. Brady reside at Wood street and Jefferson avenue.

Despite the fact that he has never previously sought public office, Mr. Brady has always been active in community affairs, particularly those of a charitable nature. He was for many years active as a member of the Central Relief Committee of Bristol, and at present a member of the State Relief Board for Bucks and Montgomery counties.

He is a member of the Bristol Lodge of Elks, and of Bristol Council, No. 906, Knights of Columbus.

He is a member of and an active worker in St. Mark's Church.

Mr. Brady was very active for a number of years in Boys' Week and he takes great interest in the welfare of youths of today. He has a humorous vein in his make-up and loves a good story. Three years ago he won recognition from Lowell Thomas as a teller of tall stories, but in Mr. Brady's own words he likes to tell little ones and listen to the big ones.

Mr. Brady is a thorough-going business man and a strong advocate of education of a practical nature.

He is a candidate for election Tuesday, November 5th, on the Republican ticket, and solicits the support of Republican voters.

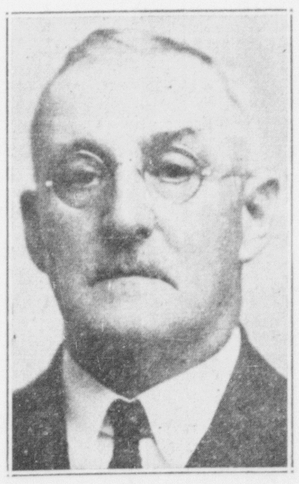

ANNUAL DUTCH SUPPER

CELEBRATE ANNIVERSARY

Frank W. Donharl and wife, Ottilie, are celebrating their silver wedding anniversary today at their home in Eddington. The couple has resided in Eddington for the past 10 years.

REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE
— FOR —
SHERIFF
BUCKS COUNTY

The Republican candidate for Sheriff is Byron Crouthamel, of Bedminster Township, well-known to a county-wide circle of friends as a man square and fair in all his dealings.

Mr. Crouthamel was born in Bedminster Township and has lived there all of his life. He has never held public office. After finishing his education he took up dairy farming for his life's work and has made a success of it. Mr. Crouthamel has been the Republican Committeeman in his district for over twenty years.

The Sheriff, as most every one knows, is, among other duties, charged with the exacting duty of enforcing the mandates of the Court and of the law, in both criminal and civil suits. Ordinarily a Sheriff is pictured in the imagination of some of the people as a more or less cold-blooded and relentless official. Mr. Crouthamel, however, his friends assert, is imbued with a rugged though kindly understanding and undoubtedly would temper the official discharge of his duties with forbearance and wisdom.

BRISTOL'S CIVIC, INDUSTRIAL AND ECONOMIC GROWTH ATTRIBUTED TO ADMINISTRATIVE ACHIEVEMENTS

STABLE LOCAL GOVERNMENT IS BIG ATTRACTION

[This is the first of a series of articles showing the great industrial, civic and economic growth of Bristol, as the result of the high standards maintained in the administration of the local government, under Republican auspices.]

Bristol, latest governmental statistics show, now has twenty-six industrial plants,—one more than a year ago—representing $13,430,500 of invested capital, supporting an annual payroll, for 2,075 employees, of $2,701,500. These figures show that Bristol with its steady plant growth has become the industrial center of Bucks County, itself embracing within its area a large number of establishments producing leading and important products of the industrial world.

This coming of industries to Bristol, which has nearly doubled its numbers in the past decade or so, is looked upon as a tribute to the high type of the local government that has been maintained for years by the Bristol municipal authorities. For it was pointed out by a representative of one of the concerns that industry when seeking a manufacturing location usually seriously considers, among other things, a number of important factors. It was emphasized that first and foremost is the question of taxes coupled with the type of the local civic administration and the character and ability of its officials. And secondly but almost of equal importance to the industrial site seekers, are the questions of transportation, labor availability and fire and health protection. It is authoritatively understood that even should the four latter requirements prove entirely satisfactory, nevertheless no industry will decide to establish its plant in a community where the taxes are high and the local government is administered in a lax and uneconomic manner. It was pointed out that an ascending tax rate means a heavier overhead and a lax government, uncertainty.

A trained research man, employed by the Bristol Courier, who had recently made just such an investigation as above described in compiling his final report declared that "up-to-date progress, low cost of government, tax rate reduction despite the depression, a high standard of efficiency and honesty" were the outstanding features of the civic administration of Bristol during a long period of years. Inasmuch as the conduct of affairs of this busy and progressive community had been under Republican auspices, the report of the research authority proved to be a magnificent endorsement of the Republican administration of the borough government.

KING'S GUILD TO END SECOND SEASON TONIGHT

Will Present Farce, "Wild Oats," in King Hall at Andalusia

TWO SUCCESSFUL YEARS

ANDALUSIA, Oct. 25—Tonight at 8.30 when the curtain goes up on the stage of King Hall, the King's Theatre Guild will bring its second season to a close. "Having been organized for two years, the guild has sought to produce plays that are representative of the best in American drama. Up to date only such comedies as 'The Patsy,' 'The Mysterious Cane of Dr. Chang,' Booth Tarkington's 'Clarence,' Robert Emmet Sherwood's 'The Queen's Husband,' Lida Larrimore's 'Yesterday's Roses,' and Martin Flavin's 'Broken Dishes,' have been presented, because of their insight to the humorous side of American life and manners.

"Tonight's presentation, 'Wild Oats,' is a farce which kept Bradway laughing for many merry months," says a spokesman of the organization.

"It has been a great pleasure preparing this play," states Miss Hilda Leverside, president, "because of the fine financial and moral support which the Guild has enjoyed from its many friends. When the Guild was first organized we felt leary as to what reception it would receive in view of the fact that our productions were chosen on their merits, as good drama, rather than mob popularity. And now, as we come to the close of our second season, we are more than glad to find so many who have appreciated our efforts by attending our performances.

"Because of his wide popularity, the Guild has again secured the noted baritone, Jack Healy, formerly of the 'Toy Theatre,' Atlantic City, who will entertain during the intermissions."

Those in the cast for "Wild Oats" are: John Ferguson, Dorothy Settle, Hilda Leverside, Ethel Hartman, Austen Larson, Eleanor Gallgaher, Mary Hufford, Axel Kleinsorg, Walter Zelinsky, George Tibbetts, Florence Vandegrift, and Harriet Davis. Stage crew: Horace Murray and Connie Freiter. Ushers: Alice Freiter and Dorothy Leverside. Bookholder: Virginia Murry. The entire production is under the personal direction of Mr. Harvey Corcoran, Philadelphia.

SCHUMANN CLUB MEMBERS GIVE MUSICAL NUMBERS

Travel Club Hears Report Of N. Y. Conference On World Affairs

OTHER SHORT TALKS

Vocal and piano music by visiting musicians, a brief discussion of legislative problems, information regarding activities of the Red Cross, and a report of a conference on World affairs, interested Travel Club members assembled in the club home on Cedar street, yesterday afternoon.

The program was preceded by a business meeting, and followed by serving of tea. Mrs. John J. Willaman was the presiding officer; while the program was in charge of Mrs. E. Linton Martin.

The guest musicians were members of the Schumann Club, namely Miss Marie Huppert, contralto; and Miss Edith Childs, pianist. As her first group of songs Miss Huppert gave "In a Luxemburg Garden", "The Crying of the Waters," "Patter on the Pane" and "The Last Hour." The second group of contralto solos, which concluded the program, was inclusive of "The Blackbird's Song," and "Ho! Mr. Piper." As a piano selection Miss Childs played Chopin's Prelude.

Legislative problems were presented by Mrs. C. Russell Ellis, who stressed the importance of voting. Then turning attention to legislative affairs, especially those of the Keystone state, Mrs. Ellis told something of the large number of bills, passed during the 1935 session. Those of especial interest to women were considered.

Mrs. Martin also introduced Mrs. Joseph Smith, chairman of the Bristol Branch of the Red Cross. The present drive was discussed, and the chairman stated there have been more major disasters in the past year than in any year since the organization was perfected, the cost being over $3,000,000. A strong plea was made for support of the great humanitarian body.

Mrs. Willaman, the club president, gave a word picture of the recent Herald-Tribune conference on World Affairs, conducted in a New York hotel. The conference theme was "America Faces a Changing World." Some of the noted speakers, including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mayor LaGuardia of New York, John Erskine,

IMPROVEMENT SURE

Those who are disposed to be depressed because of crime statistics may be reassured by a speech made recently before a meeting of a Federation of Bar Associations in New York. Former Gov. Charles S. Whitman assured the convention that a comparison of conditions today with those of 150 years ago would show great improvement.

In making such a comparison two factors should be considered: The public conscience and the facilities for publishing information. Even a superficial acquaintance with literature enables one to judge that many conditions tolerated a century or more ago would not be permitted now. Machinery for collecting statistics together with the marvelous ability of the press and radio for making instantly available accurate reports of everything happening far and near contrive to make the volume of present day crime loom large.

Mr. Whitman declared, "The biggest asset of American people is their ability not to lose faith." Their faith in their ability to improve their government gives confidence that law and order will prevail to make progress in the suppression of crime.

EVERYBODY TALKS TODAY

Looking over the front pages and even as far back as the sports sections, it is evident this is not a year for the strong, silent man. Few of our rulers today, in any field, belong to that race of speechless giants who were still on top as lately as 10 years ago.

Spin the radio dial at any hour of day or night and you come upon a dictator, a political medicine man or a sport celebrity in full cry. Where an earlier Caesar sat down quietly after his conquest and composed a Latin textbook for schoolboys still unborn, the new Caesar must burst into thunder at the mere sight of a microphone. The older statesman who shaped a national destiny without a public word has given way to the ruler who thinks aloud, who is up on the mechanics of coast-to-coast networks, and what hour will find the citizen at his fireside and receptive to a sales talk for lots in a new Utopia.

Most astonishing perhaps is the impromptu oratory of our supposedly inarticulate kings of sport. Hauled from a dressing room shower to say a word of greeting to the folks, they display a facility with words that would dismay the professional spouter of an older time.

CHAPTER XXVII

The red light was burning above the sound stage door, so the dynamic Abrams, the Production Manager, was forced to wait outside until the scene had been shot. He fumed a little, he was wasting time, but he did not relish the long walk back across the lot to his office with his errand unfulfilled. He had just come from the projection room and was in the right mood to give that De Vore girl a dressing-down . . . or rather, a dressing-up, he reflected, pleased with his pun.

The door burst open as he waited and a property boy dashed out, preoccupied with getting some prop in a hurry. The Production Manager, seeing the red light was off, seized his chance to dash in before the director repeated the scene.

But Abrams need not have hurried. In the cabaret set, which was his destination, the technicians were moving lights and setting up cameras and sound equipment from a new angle. The actors were scattering toward their make-up boxes.

The Production Manager saw Julie De Vore undulating in a tight black satin dinner gown toward her canvas chair, and bustled toward her importantly.

"Miss De Vore!" His voice was peremptory.

"Yeah? Oh, it's Mr. Abrams." Julie unconcernedly popped a piece of gum into her mouth and inspected her false eyelashes in a hand mirror. "What's on your mind?"

"I've just seen yesterday's rushes. You've got to wear more under that dress!"

"What the heck!" Julie looked herself over and then announced with real hauteur: "This gown's just made to show off MY figure!!"

Abrams grabbed the distraught property boy who was hurrying back to the set with four different kinds of cigarette cases in his hands.

"Go up and get the wardrobe mistress. Tell her I want her down here right away." The boy shot him a baleful glance, but Abrams was looking around for the director. "Oh, Lucien, can you come over here a sec?"

Lucien Morrow, who had been squinting through the lens of a camera, studying the composition of his next scene, sauntered over to them.

"What's up?" he asked, glancing at Julie's indignant face.

"De Vore's got to wear more clothes. . . . I've just seen yesterday's rushes . . . it's awful!"

"But it won't get by the censors!"

"Stand up, Julie. Walk around." While Julie complied, flashing a resentful look at Abrams, Lucien scrutinized her. "I don't know. Looks O. K. to me. But why not please his sense of decency, Julie, and wear more? We don't want to contribute to his delinquency!"

"It'll spoil the line of this dress. I won't wear a thing more—so there!" Julie stamped her foot.

"You'll do as you're told!" snapped Abrams. "You're not a star so you can't pull the temperamental stuff. Oh, Mrs. Arnold," as the wardrobe mistress hurried up breathlessly, "get a whatchamacallit for Miss De Vore" (demonstrating with his hands)—"the tighter the better."

The wardrobe mistress compressed her lips and shook her head disapprovingly. "It'll spoil the effect, but—if you feel. . . . Will you come up to the wardrobe, Julie, and let me fit you?"

"Not right now," Lucien decided. "I've got to have you in the next scene. It's a long shot where it won't show, Sam. Don't you worry—we'll fix it." Lucien took the Production Manager's arm and guided him diplomatically off the set.

Julie sat back in her chair and looked mutinously at Mrs. Arnold. "I won't wear anything else unless A. Z. Steinberg himself tells me I've got to!"

Mrs. Arnold nodded approvingly. "Listen, I'll tack in a tiny piece of chiffon after this scene. It won't make any difference in the looks of the dress, and we can tell old Fuss-Budget Abrams that you're all strapped in."

Later, as Julie and Mrs. Arnold concocted the flimsy camouflage behind a screen, Julie suddenly heard a familiar name:

"Pennington. Isn't he some kind of an artist or something?"

"What about him? Let's see the paper."

Evidently two extra girls were reading a newspaper as they waited for the next scene.

"Hm. These society dames marry and divorce just as fast as the movie gals, don't they?"

Julie twisted away from Mrs. Arnold, to listen far more intently.

"Sharlene Standring, huh? Didn't a millionaire give her the goby one time?"

"Yeah, Kent Damerell. Read this. He's back in town—and his wife's dead. Scandal! Scandal!"

"All you people on the set!" bellowed the assistant director through his megaphone.

"That'll do!" Julie said hastily to Mrs. Arnold, and rushed around the screen to pick up the scattered newspaper which the girls had discarded as they sauntered to their places in the cabaret.

There it was—pictures and everything: "Mrs. Stuart Pennington (nee Sharlene Standring) has established residence in Reno . . ."

Julie ran to Lucien with it. He read the item in astonishment. "What do you know about that? . . . Well, maybe Stuart'll get down to work now. . . . Julie, you go in and pick up your glass just as you did in the last scene, and then sit down at the table and look out—about here—and say your lines to Harvey. Go on in and rehearse."

In the next hour of strenuous work, Julie did not have time to savor the delicious morsel of news as she would have liked. But her heart was singing, "If Stuart is free—Oh, then! Oh, then!"

About three o'clock a messenger came out on the set. "Mr. Steinberg wants Miss De Vore in his office as soon as she's through working."

Mr. Steinberg, the head of the studio! Julie gasped and then glanced guiltily down at her form-fitting costume. Was he going to order her to wear more? Or maybe fire her!

"You can go along now," said Morrow. "I'll be getting Harvey's and Lindsay's scenes in this set, the rest of the day. I won't need you."

"Nine o'clock in the morning," warned the assistant director, "in the pink negligee."

Julie threw a scarf about her bare shoulders and hurried to A. Z. Steinberg's grand office. After some delay, she was ushered into the inner sanctum, where the company lawyer and various other executives sat with "Chief" Steinberg.

Over in the corner Abrams was ensconced behind the others, as befitted his rank. Julie jerked up her head indignantly as she saw him, but she was careful to cross the scarf demurely over her bosom.

"Mr. Steinberg," she said quickly, her voice trembling, "can I help it if people have bad minds?"

"Why, what do you mean, Julie?"

"People coming out on the set and accusing me—I'm a lady, Mr. Steinberg, and I'm not used to people like that!" Again she shot an unmistakably hostile glance at Abrams.

"What's the matter, Sam?" Mr. Steinberg turned to the Production Manager inquiringly.

"Why," Abrams hurried to say, insinuatingly, "don't you think, A. Z., that Miss De Vore ought to wear . . . uh, more . . . a bit more with that dress? The censors, you know—"

"Take off your scarf, Julie. . . . Don't be an ass, Sam! It's on the strength of her vampishness that we're giving her a contract!"

"Con-contract!" screeched Julie, sitting down suddenly.

"Yes," Mr. Steinberg said in his kindly, fatherly way, "we're talking about giving you a long-term contract. That's what I called you in for. We're not going to let you play heavies any more. The first year will be featured parts and leads—Cinderella stuff. Then, if you catch on with the fans the way we think you will, it means stardom, the second year."

STARDOM! Julie was dazzled. Facile tears rose in her eyes. She jumped to her feet and ran to kiss the startled, but no less pleased, Mr. Steinberg on his bald head.

The other officials shook hands with her and congratulated her, but she stared at the crestfallen Sam Abrams with smoky languorous eyes. Then the star-designate pulled a thread out of the bosom of her dress with lacquered nails, plucked out a tiny band of chiffon, and dropped it in the waste basket.

"There! I feel better!" she said triumphantly, twitching herself.

"Take a copy of this contract with you, Julie," said Mr. Steinberg. "Read it over and see what you're signing. . . . Notice the clause about behaving yourself."

"You'll never have to worry about me," Julie assured him.

When "The Big Chief" let her go, Julie hurried to a telephone and called the Standring house in Beverly Hills. Brooks answered.

"Is Mr. Pennington there?" asked Julie.

"Mr. Pennington is not at home, madam."

"Will you tell me where he's living now?"

"I cannot say, madam."

"Listen. This is Lucien Morrow's secretary. Mr. Morrow said I must get hold of Mr. Pennington—"

"Mr. Morrow? Yes, I had orders to give him Mr. Pennington's address if he called. Just a moment."

When Julie heard the familiar address of the Hollywood hill-top, she gasped: "Well, I might have known! Thank you."

* * *

Julie left the taxi at the foot of the hill, and glanced eagerly into the niche in the hillside, expecting to see a shiny successor to Mr. Jingle. The niche was empty. Perhaps Stuart was not at home. She hurried her steps, heart in her throat.

But he was at home. She heard him whistling before she got to the door. So she stole to the window and looked in. Back turned, he was at the table sketching. Julie slipped around to the kitchen door and tiptoed in. Very cautiously she took off her coat and hat and laid them on the old refrigerator in the screen porch. The whistling did not cease. With infinite pains, mindful of its old habit of squeaking, she got the ice box door open and looked in. There was a bottle of beer! Commercial near-beer, but it would have to do. She found the same old battered tray in the kitchen and a couple of nicked glasses. She slipped, with her plunder, into the studio.

Stuart was not aware of her until he heard the familiar pop as she removed the tin cap from the beer bottle. He turned swiftly. Julie, heart beating fast, went on playing her part, pouring foaming beer into the glasses.

"Julie!" he exclaimed, getting up. His voice sounded glad. She glanced at him quickly, hopefully. He was smiling at her, quizzically and affectionately. She knew at once that it had no relation to that look he had thrown Sharlene long ago when she surprised him in the garden. But—he was glad to see her.

She carried his glass to him and held up her lips to be kissed.

"Jehosaphat!" he exclaimed, rubbing his mouth with the back of his hand, "that lip rouge is bitter!"

"Oh, I'm sorry!" She was ready to cry with vexation and disappointment. "I wish I'd remembered to take it off!" She scrubbed at her lips with her handkerchief.

He laughed. "Never mind, Julie. You're a darling to come up and see me. I suppose you've heard of the fiasco?"

"The what? Oh, you mean—yes, just this afternoon. It was in the paper."

"It would be. We seem to make newspaper headlines every so often. . . . But you're in print all the time now, Julie. Let's sit down over here and you tell me all about the career."

She settled herself beside him on the couch, studying his face covertly. He didn't seem unhappy. He looked better than he had that day in the Standring house. She took heart again.

Strickland, of the Doylestown substation of State Police; Constable A. R. Atkinson, of Doylestown and Harry B. Warren, investigator of the legal department of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, of which the Tuscarrora company is a subsidiary.

Details of the crime and the investigation were made known today by the oil company's investigator and Trooper Strickland, at the Doylestown sub-station.

About 10 days ago, the Tuscarrora Oil Company discovered some wire on their private telegraph line between Bayonne, N. J., and Nagley, gone. The wire was missing for a distance of about three and one-half miles from the pumping station at Center Bridge. The theft was not discovered sooner because the wire was part of a "dead line" that was not being used, the telegraphic service of the two companies having been shifted to one wire operated by the National Transit Company.

The theft was discovered by one of the linemen, David Cully, who is employed by the Tuscarrora company, pumpers of oil between Bayonne, N. J., and the Ohio town of Nagley. The National Transit Company pumps oil and has headquarters in Oil City, Pa.

According to the police, the wire was stolen in the daytime over a period that started in November, 1934, and continued until 10 days ago. One of the men arrested was a former employe of the Tuscarrora company for a number of years.

The wire was sold to junk dealers living in Lambertville, N. J., Lansdale and Hatboro, police say.

The police have signed confessions from the three persons arrested. They say the theft of copper wire has increased considerably recently because of the high price received for the wire by the junk dealers when they sell it.

The Truth About Our County Institutions

the opinion that the buildings and grounds are being kept in excellent physical and sanitary conditions; that wholesome food, carefully prepared and in sufficient quantity, is being served; that the health of the inmates, most of whom are well past the prime of life, is being carefully guarded and is as good as can be expected. That the inmates are being treated with kindness and consideration, is evidenced by absence of complaints and an air of cheerfulness and contentedness which prevades the institution."

Very respectfully submitted,
Mrs. John S. Fretz
Irene Harley Ozias
Joseph DeB Abbott
Frederick H. Clymer
Board of Visitors to the County Home.

May, 1935

"We, the Grand Jury for the May Sessions, 1935, beg leave to submit the following report:

"The Grand Jury visited the County Home and found same in satisfactory order. We approve recommendations as per plans and specifications as presented by the Clerk of the County Commissioners, and also that the building at the County Home be painted on the outside.

"The Grand Jury visited the County Jail and found it to be in very good condition. We inspected the Administration Building and found it satisfactory in every respect.

"We inspected the Court House and all offices housed therein and found conditions satisfactory."

February, 1935

"We, the Grand Jury for the February Sessions, 1935, beg leave to submit the following report:

"In accordance with further instructions of the Court, the members of the Grand Jury in a body visited and inspected county property, namely the Court House, the Administration Building, the Jail and the County Home.

"The Court House building was in excellent condition, and we commend the improvements made in recent years.

"The physical condition of the jail was clean and neatly kept. Prisoners questioned by members stated that they were humanely treated and given sufficient food. The dispensary and the facilities for bathing and laundering appeared adequate.

"The County Home was examined and the jurors were pleased to find the hospital building clean, comfortable, and well kept. Space, lighting and ventilation were good. Walls were painted a light buff color and floors were clean and sanitary. Our inspection developed no criticism of this building.

"The farm buildings were exceptionally clean and well cared for. The live stock was thrifty and of excellent quality.

"The dairy and laundry buildings were modern, sanitary and praiseworthy in every way. Grounds and drives were neatly kept.

"The Directors of the Poor are making sincere efforts to make the declining years of their charges comfortable and decent. The good housekeeping of Superintendent and Mrs. Kriebel, and their assistants, deserve the highest commendation, and praise is due the farmer, Mr. Chittick, also."

High-lights of some of the more important speeches were touched upon by Mrs. Willaman, who brought back the message from some of the speakers that trade, and better knowledge of people of other lands will be a means of world peace. One speaker, stated the club president, advocated more visiting between people of the many nations, with cheaper fares and the elimination of passports. "Both sides of all questions were given," stated the Bristolian.

ATTENTION!!

CITIZENS OF BUCKS COUNTY

The people of Bucks County are having forcibly brought to their attention the sinful, wanton waste and extravagance of the Roosevelt and Earle Administrations, by the importation of Philadelphia's unemployed on road projects in Bucks County, when eight thousand persons are on relief in this County.

Go and see for yourself how your money is being thrown away, —on the road from Furlong to Rushland and the Jacksonville Road near Ivyland and at Tradesville, where the men are brought from Ivyland in trucks, getting on the job from 11 to 11.30 a. m., and quitting at 1 p. m., having lunch in the meanwhile. But do not take any pictures as the "road bosses" will smash your camera.

So many men on the job they get in each other's way

The project will cost $75,000 a mile. Under Republican administration, roads were built for $8,000 a mile.

Why not place some of Bucks County's jobless on this work?

AND IT IS YOUR MONEY BEING SQUANDERED

Tax money collected from you on everything you buy and use every day, is being frittered away through inexperienced and insufficiently supervised workers in numbers so great that they are actually in each other's way.

The work is supervised (?) by foreman brought from Philadelphia,—clerks, former factory workers, mechanics, etc., who get $144.00 a month on these road projects supervising road construction, something they know nothing whatever about.

Wastefulness is not necessary on any job, relief or otherwise.

There is no excuse for this sickening waste of your money. Jobs could have been provided for all of them,—as well as Bucks County's jobless,—on our highways by the expenditure of the money efficiently and not in the guise of giving work to men on relief, simply to build up a powerful Democratic political machine in Philadelphia.

Why should the cost of transportation from Philadelphia every day, estimated at $5,000 a week, be added to the construction costs, when labor can be found right at home?

-- THE ANSWER IS --

The "Kelly for Mayor" button worn by the workers

IT IS NOW EASIER TO UNDERSTAND WHY

- The Roosevelt government is operating at a loss of nine million five hundred thousand dollars a day.
- The Roosevelt administration has put this country in debt to the amount of thirty billion dollars.
- Pennsylvania's share of that debt is $2,500,000,000 and Bucks County's share is $25,000,000.
- The Roosevelt administration spent more money in two and a half years than was spent by the Federal Government from the administration of President Washington to that of President Wilson.

WHAT HAS THE ABOVE TO DO WITH THE ELECTION IN BUCKS COUNTY IN NOVEMBER?

--JUST THIS--

THE CANDIDATES ON THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET FOR THE COUNTY OFFICES HAVE ENDORSED THE POLICIES AND PRINCIPLES OF ROOSEVELT AND EARLE!

IF YOU WANT BUCKS COUNTY ADMINISTERED FOR YOUR BENEFIT AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST, AND ITS PUBLIC OFFICES NOT TURNED OVER FOR EXPLOITATION BY THE ACHEY-FLOOD DEMOCRATIC MACHINE UNDER THE ROOSEVELT-EARLE POLICIES.

—THEN—

KEEP THE SPENDTHRIFT PARTY OUT OF THE COURT HOUSE

—BY—

VOTING FOR THE CANDIDATES ON THE REPUBLICAN TICKET FOR THE COUNTY OFFICES, WHO ARE PLEDGED FOR AN ECONOMICAL AND EFFICIENT ADMINISTRATION OF THE COUNTY AFFAIRS.

FOR THE RECORD: NOTABLE EVENTS OF MONTH IN BRIEF

Two Dictators September's Headliners

By International News Service

The assassinating of Senator Huey Long, a disastrous Florida hurricane which cost hundreds of lives and a visible threat of war between England and Italy arising out of the Ethiopian situation made September notable in the news.

Herewith a summary of the biggest stories of the month:

ABROAD

The plenary session of the League of Nations, last hope for peace in Africa began September 4 and there quickly developed a situation threatening war in Europe.

The situation had been confused at the first of the month by the surprising announcement in Addis Ababa that Francis W. Rickett, a British promoter, had obtained a government concession for exploitation of mineral rights in half the country for American interests. These turned out to be a Standard Oil Company subsidiary after Standard Oil Company officials had denied it.

It was partially clarified by the subsequent announcement of Secretary of State Cordell Hull on the eve of the League meeting, that he had persuaded Standard Oil officials to relinquish the concession.

The Italian delegation was difficult from the start of the League meeting. Mussolini's mouthpieces walked out in a body when the Frenchman representing Haile Selassie, Professor Gaston Jeze, stated Ethiopia's case. Their country had been "insulted."

As the League machinery slowly moved there came a notable speech by Sir Samuel Hoare, British Foreign Secretary, pledging England's support of "steady, collective resistance to all acts of unprovoked aggression."

What would France do? Two days later Premier Laval gave the answer: France would go along with England.

Mussolini answered through the Italian cabinet: No League action, not even sanctions "heretofore unused in graver disputes" would break Italy's friendship with France. And nothing would stop Italy in her "colonial episode."

The League's slow machinery finally ground out its solution of the affair, the "suggestions" of the committee of five nations (France, England, Spain, Poland and Turkey). International "assistance" to Ethiopia in governing wild Abyssinia under the direction of four European advisers and recognition by England and France of "Italy's special interests in the economic development of Ethiopia," formed the basis of the plan.

As this was happening the British fleet, mightiest in the world, steamed past Gibraltar into the Mediterranean. The London stock market experienced a "Black Friday" as capital fled to the dollar. More than $100,000,000 in gold was shipped to New York.

Ethiopia accepted the League plan. Italy rejected it. The rains which had been delaying military action in Abyssinia stopped. The way was clear for the "colonial episode" and "collective resistance to all acts of unprovoked aggression."

INTERNATIONAL

Magistrate Louis M. Brodsky, in discharging the five defendants who clambered on the S. S. Bremen in New York and hauled down the swastika, referred to it as a "pirate flag." The incident not only led to Germany protesting and America regretting but Hitler called together the Reichstag and decreed the emblem Germany's official ensign. The same session barred German Jews from citizenship.

AT HOME

It was left to the American state of Louisiana to answer the question—what happens when a dictator is assassinated. Dr. Carl Weiss, brilliant young surgeon, stepped from behind a pillar in the new skyscraper capitol at Baton Rouge and fired one fatal shot at Senator Huey Long. He was immediately riddled by 29 shots from Long's bodyguard. Death concealed his motive unless it was the dictator's political action against Weiss's father-in-law, a judge.

In consternation the Long followers met and tried to hold together their great one-man machine. They agreed to withhold anouncement of candidacies until the regular party caucus. But the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, national "Share-the-Wealth" organizer, ended the truce by announcing his support of Wade A. Martin, public service commissioner, for Long's seat in Washington, and Lieut. Governor James A. Noe for Governor.

The "regular" organization backed by Governor O. K. Allen named another slate the next day and Martin and Smith joined with it. Martin's candidacy for the Senate was endorsed but Noe was passed over. Judge Richard Leche was nominated for Governor.

There began a fierce battle between the Rev. Mr. Smith and Noe whose political strength is great. Each side claimed that its slate was in accord with Long's last wish uttered before he died.

A tropical hurricane from the Caribbean which struck Florida on Labor Day, caused unusual loss of life because of the exposed position of 800 war veterans building a highway across the keys to Key West, an FERA project. Three hundred veterans and more than 10 civilians were killed. There was a question of whether official negligence was responsible for the heavy loss of life.

The liner Dixie, bound from New Orleans to New York, was blown upon Florida reef. After two days the seas quieted enough for the safe transfer of 245 passengers to nearby ships.

President Roosevelt, resting at his home at Hyde Park, N. Y., made public a letter from Roy Howard, newspaper publisher, and his own answer. "This basic program, however," wrote the President, has now reached substantial completion and the 'breathing spell' of which you speak is here—very decidedly so.' A new phrase for the coming campaign has been coined.

The signs of recovery were increased by a prize fight in New York with a gate that missed the million mark only by a few thousand. In the ring Joe Louis, 21-year-old Negro, knocked out Max Baer in four rounds. Each received $250,000 as his share.

Sir Malcolm Campbell drove his racing car 301 miles an hour on the salt beds of Utah—a new record for speed on earth. Laura Ingalls took the transcontinental flight record for women away from Amelia Earhart by arriving in New York 13 hours and 34 minutes out of California.

"It is my opinion that in the conduct of national finances, as in the conduct of corporation finances or family budgets, if things are not going as well as one had hoped, it is far better to face the truth than to try to hide it."—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 19, 1932.

"There is something much more than mere error in this kind of thing (a wrong statement regarding the federal finances). Our people, and the world, are entitled to reasonable accuracy and a reasonable prudence, and above all, they are entitled to complete frankness.

"They have a right and a duty to place in retirement those who conceal realities and abuse confidence."—Gov. Roosevelt, Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 19, 1932.

Governor Roosevelt was eminently correct in 1932 when he stated that the American people are "entitled to complete frankness" in any statement regarding federal finances, and that they have "a right and a duty" to drive from public life those who abuse their confidence in that respect and conceal the real situation.

There has never been a more deceptive and misleading statement regarding the fiscal affairs of the United States than that which was issued by President Roosevelt, under date of September 29, appearing in the public press Monday morning, September 30. In that statement he said, among many other things which were entirely without foundation:

"The amount estimated to be expended for recovery and relief (the current fiscal year) is slightly less than was spent for this purpose last year, and is consequently under the estimate of the 1936 budget."

He closed his statement with the following wholly unsubstantiated and unwarranted assurance:

"It is anticipated that the deficit for this year will be about $300,000,000 less than the deficit for 1935 (the year ended June 30, last). This reduction in the deficit, however, can be realized only in the event that no new items of expenditure are added to the year's program as set forth in this summation."

By and large, the President's method of attempting to show his Administration is practicing economy is to:

(1) Grossly over-estimate what he proposes to spend.

(2) Grossly under-estimate what he expects the federal income to be.

In this way he builds up a fictitious deficit.

(3). At the end of the year he then shows he has not spent the money he said he would. He has received more money than he thought he would. The deficit is less than he said it would be, and he credits the difference between his fictitious deficit and the actual deficit as a real saving.

No one will be deceived by this deceptive practice. A deficit is a deficit, whether it is as larage as anticipated or not.

If an individual should start to balance his own personal budget by that process, he would wind up in the bankruptcy court in short order. By the President's logic and the President's method, he would begin by saying he intended to balance his personal budget by spending only $10 a day more than he earned. At the end of the year he would show that he had spent only $6 a day more than he earned. Therefore, he had "saved" $4 a day. He would take no account of the fact that he still was spending $6 a day more than he is earning.

The President is unable to cite any figures issued by the United States Treasury Department to substantiate his statement of September 29. The following figures are taken from the United States Treasury statement at the close of business, September 30, last, and represent the actual expenditures and receipts of the federal government during the first three months of the current fiscal year, as well as the actual expenditures and receipts for the first three months of the fiscal year which ended June 30, last. These figures show for the months of July, August and September, this year and last year, the following:

	July-Sept., 1934	July-Sept., 1935
Receipts	$953,899,530	$998,464,465

Increase in receipts for the first three months this fiscal year over first three months last fiscal year, $44,564,935, or 4.7 per cent.

	July-Sept., 1934	July-Sept., 1935
Ordinary expenditures	$667,187,754	$949,803,786

This shows an increase in the ordinary, or routine, expenditures of the Government for the first three months of this fiscal year of $282,616,032 more than for the first three months of last fiscal year—an increase of 42.3 per cent.

It must be kept in mind that ordinary, or routine, expenditures represent fixed expenditures of the regular activities of the Government. They do not take into account any emergency or relief expenditures. There is nothing to justify the assertion that for the remaining nine months of this fiscal year the ordinary expenditures will be proportionately less than they were in the first three months.

The ordinary expenditures last fiscal year were $3,721,234,634. They, in turn, were $621,000,000 greater than in the first fiscal year of the Roosevelt Administration, ended June 30, 1934.

If the rate of increase of ordinary expenditures during the next nine months maintains the rate for the last three months, the increase for the year will amount to $1,567,866,187 over last year.

There is every reason to justify the assumption that the rate will continue. The President makes an attempt to show that the increase in the ordinary expenditures for the first three months are extraordinary. That, clearly, is not sustained by the Treasury statement. He says that the estimated expenditures for the "regular establishments" that is, the ordinary expenditures) for the current fiscal year are $582,425,000 greater than they were last year, but he added this is due to the Government's increase in its contribution to the civil service retirement fund and the adjusted service certificate fund; to the restoration of employees' compensation, and to increase in pensions and compensation to war veterans.

That does not square with the Treasury statement. Of the increase of $282,616,032 in ordinary expenditures for the first three months of this year, only $69,000,000 was chargeable against the increase in the Government's contribution to civil service retirement and the adjusted service certificate fund. The major items of increase the President did not refer to in his message, and these are the items which really count and which will continue throughout the year.

There was an increase of $13,613,203 in the first three months in the routine expenditures of the departments. Of course, a very appreciable part of this was due to the increased payrolls due to the adding of 150,000 government employees. That item will not be reduced—on the other hand, it will be increased.

There was an increase of $150,362,239 in public debt charges. That item will increase so long as the Government continues to borrow money.

There was an increase of $43,326,168 in Agriculture Adjustment Administration. This is the administrative expense, not the relief end of the A. A. A. Now that Secretary Wallace has announced he will enforce the potato control law, and is preparing to extend the activities of the A. A. A. along other lines, there is no reason to believe that increase will show a smaller rate during the remaining nine months.

There was an increase of $32,312,634 in national defense, for the Army and Navy. Inasmuch as President Roosevelt, on his western trip, issued a statement from his train that he intended to accelerate expenses in this direction, that item will increase rather than decrease.

There was an increase of $5,000,000 in the post office deficiency. The President attempts to charge this off to legislation granting a 40-hour week to postal employees. Unless he has the intention of having that law repealed early next year, this item of increase will continue throughout the remaining nine months.

	July-Sept., 1934	July-Sept., 1935
Emergency relief	$828,383,747	$880,682,445

This represents an increase in the emergency relief expenditures the first three months of the current fiscal year of $52,298,698 over the similar period last year, or an increase of 6.3 per cent.

It is in this item that the President resorts to his most inexcusable deception. He states the amount estimated for expenditure for recovery and relief this year will be less than last year. The first three months this year it was 6.3 per cent. greater, and the surface had not been scratched. Scarcely any of the $4,800,000,000 which was appropriated to the President to be expended this year for relief had been expended during the first three months.

The Treasury statement shows that the total expenditures of the Works Progress Administration for the first three months this year was the beggarly sum of $17,124,955. The expenditure of $1,700,000,000 by Mr. Hopkins is yet to appear in this column.

Only $82,617,000 out of an allocated fund of $400,000,000 had been expended on public highways.

Professor Tugwell, during the first three months this year, expended the mere pittance of $6,916,848, out of $200,000,000 allotted him for his Resettlement Administration.

The Rural Electrification Administration has been handed $5,268,267 to be expended, but up to September 30, it had spent only $104,148.

The River and Harbors Works has at its disposal $502,252,755. Of this amount during three months it had spent only $34,135,754.

The Emergency Conservation work has at its disposal $1,282,628,395. It had spent only $160,784,558.

In addition, the statement was issued by the Works Progress Administration, October 9, that $27,056,268 have been allocated for the National Youth Movement, and $27,316,217 for white collar projects, neither of which had spent a cent of that amount up to the close of business, September 30.

The above figures show that there is not the least justification upon the part of the President to make the claim that there will be less money expended for recovery and relief this year than there was last—unless he intends to break his pledge to the American people, and expend little or nothing of the $5,000,000,000 voted him to relieve distress throughout the country.

The President says the deficit this year will be $300,000,000 less than it was last year. Again he can find no support for this statement in any figures issued by the United States Treasury. The figures of the United States Treasury at the close of business, September 30, last, for the first three months of the current fiscal year and for the corresponding period last year are:

	July-Sept., 1934	July-Sept., 1935
Deficit	541,671,971	$832,021,766

This shows an increase of $290,349,795 in the deficit for the first three months this year over the first three months last year, or an increase of 53.6 per cent. At this rate the deficit for the current fiscal year, instead of being $300,000,000 less than the deficit last year, would be $1,916,000,000 more than last year, or a deficit of $6,492,467,453.

That estimate may be too high, but it is based upon real figures issued by the United States Treasury Department, and not upon a political statement designed to administer an opiate to the business interests and taxpayers of the United States.

Moreover, the estimate is based upon the present rate of expenditures, which, as the above figures show, is more likely to increase than decrease in the next nine months, inasmuch as practically all of the relief expenditures are yet to come.

The President purposely left for himself an "out" when he said that the estimated reduction in deficit could be realized only in event no new items of expenditure are added from now on. The sole purpose of that statement was to make the ex-service men, and probably others, the scapegoats for this Administration. The President knows, as does everyone else, that nothing short of a miracle can prevent the enactment of the bonus measure at the next session of Congress. The President also has publicly stated he has in contemplation additional legislation for the next Congress that will call for additional expenditures.

There is only one condition under which the President's budget statement of September 29, can be realized. That is, he will refuse to expend between now and the close of the present fiscal year, June 30, 1936, the relief funds which Congress voted him, saving the bulk of that money to be used between July 1 and the November elections for the open purpose of controlling those elections.

The President's promise, by implication, that no new taxes will be necessary to finance the tremendous debt now being created by his Administration cannot stand analysis. Even if he did not increase the deficit this year above that of last year, there would be an accumulated deficit of $11,140,211,961 during the first three fiscal years of the Roosevelt Administration.

If this is not to be paid off by increase in taxes, how is it to be paid off? The only alternative would be open repudiation. Is the President prepared to admit that his statement that no additional taxes will be necessary in order to finance the tremendous debt his Administration is creating means that eventually he will adopt the method of certain European countries and repudiate in its entirety our government debt, leaving those who hold government bonds to "hold the sack"?

HIGH SCHOOL ELEVEN TO PLAY AT LANGHORNE

By Jack Orr

The Bristol High School Bunnies meet a breather in their schedule when they journey to Langhorne to contest the weak Red and Blue of Langhorne.

In the first returns of the Lower Bucks County Conference standing, Bristol High is in first place with Yardley. A win today for Bristol will not mean anything to them in the conference as the Red and Blue have yet to win a game.

The figures of the conference are compiled in accordance to the team's opponents records. Each team's average is figured and their opponents' standing is multiplied. Thus the Cardinal and Gray have a 1.000% standing and their only conference rival—Fallsington—has .250. Hence the Bunnies' mark is 1.000% x .250% which equals, of course, .250%.

Complete standing:

	Won	Lost	%
Bristol	1	0	.250
Yardley	1	0	.250
Fallsington	1	3	.208
Morrisville	2	0	.200
Newtown	1	1	.100

RAIN WAS WELCOMED BY COUNTY FARMERS

Grain and Late Vegetables Are Beginning to Suffer From Drought

FAVORABLE FOR CORN

Farmers throughout Bucks County welcomed the rain of Wednesday, although it was not as much as some had hoped for. The continued dry weather was beginning to be felt and previous to yesterday's precipitation the crops had begun to suffer.

County Agent William F. Greenawalt, Doylestown, stated this week that although the farmers would like to see nice weather a few more weeks, rain would be of a great help to the Fall crops.

He stated that the grains in particular cannot grow in order to give them a good start this Winter. Timothy, sown a few weeks ago—and alfalfa which was sown in August, will suffer for a lack of moisture.

Some of the Fall truck crops, including celery, rutabagas and spinach seeded late in the season and to be held over for next Spring are beginning to show the results of the drought. Pasture lands, also according to Mr. Greenawalt, are becoming rather short becauuse the grass cannot grow.

On the other hand, farmers throughout the country are welcoming the clear weather because it means they can harvest their crops with comparatively little difficulty. Very few potatoes remain to be harvested, but the dry weather will enable the farmers to gather them without difficulty.

Most farmers have completed their corn cutting and they now are in the midst of husking, and one of the essentials for this is dry weather. County Agent Greenawalt said this week that the corn will be in much better condition for the cribs if it is dry when taken from the field. Ground in the fields, where the corn is being husked, is quite dry and this adds much to the comfort of the persons harvesting the crop.

Many orchardists throughout the county are in the midst of harvesting bumper apple crops, and they, too, would prefer a continuation of the clear weather for a few more weeks.

There have been a few light rains during September and October, but the last to do the farmers much good was that which took place during the week of Labor Day.

CASEY JONES' FIREMAN IS LIVING IN POVERTY

Sim Webb Says He Will Never Forget the Historic Ride

TELLS OF EXPERIENCE

By International News Service

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 25 — (INS) —Odd jobs here and there, a few pennies today and maybe a dollar tomorrow, but in all a meagre existence is the luck of Sim Webb, negro, who was the fireman with Casey Jones on that epochal ride 35 years ago.

The 61-year-old negro who fired several tons of coal into the engine firebox before the crash that cost Casey Jones' life and inspired a famous folk song lives in humble surroundings here.

"No, sah! I'se won't forget that night if I lives to be a thousand years old," he says. Likely there's a tear on his cheeks as he recalls:

"It was raining a cold, slow drizzle on the night of April 30 when I gets my orders to ride with Mister Casey on No. 382. We was pulling the Chicago, Memphis and New Orleans Express, better known as 'The Cannon Ball.'

"And what a Cannon Ball she was that night!"

Casey's efforts to make up an hour and 15 minutes lost when the Cannon Ball came into Memphis late from the North brought a quaver to Webb's voice as he said:

"Mr. Casey was the nicest white man I ever worked for. We pulls out of the Poplar street station at 1.10 a. m. and we was due to leave at 11.55 p. m. We ran down the river front tracks, over the Beale street trestle and through the "S" curve into the old Calhoun street depot to finish our station work.

"That made it about 1.30 a. m. when the 'Cannon Ball' pulled out," Sim added.

"And how that old 382 ate coal dat night," Sim added. "I shoveled until I thought sho' my arm would break. That engine sho' pulled fast. She pulled into Goodman, Miss., in nothing flat. But we had to sidetrack 'cause No. 2 had the main line—and she passed us making about 40 miles an hour. And when she passed we pulled out the switch and onto the main line.

"We rolls into a long, sharp curve at Vaughan, making about 80 miles an hour. Befo' I knows what's happenin' I sees the markers on the caboose of another train. I glances around at Mister Casey and yells:

"'Look out! We gonna hit something.'"

The negro said he didn't know whether or not Casey heard him, or whether the engineer swung far enough into the curve for him to see the light on the caboose. He said when he fell out of the fireman's gangway he felt the air go into the emergency.

Slim barely missed a culvert. Fortunately he landed in the grass and was only slightly injured. No. 382 crashed into the caboose, split it wide open, ran through two box cars ahead and a car loaded with lumber ahead of that. Casey died instantly. No one else was injured.

Mrs. Casey is still alive and living in Kentucky. Contrary to the songs' suggestion, she didn't marry another man "on the Salt Lake Line."
